Dear Miss Harrow,

In reply to your letter of 11 March which Peter Phelan has passed on to me, I am very happy to enclose the entry form, rules and further information on the Booker Prize for fiction, which is the only literary prize that the Association administrates.

As you say three new awards were announced two weeks ago. These are £1000 literary awards for a novel, biography and poetry and are sponcered jointly by Whitbreads and the Booksellers Association. For further information and entry forms may I suggest you approach Miss Curtis at the Booksellers Association.

I am sorry to be unhelpful in supplying you with information on all literary prizes, but as you know there is a considerable number, the most important of which are listed in the Writers' and Artists' Year Book (published by A. & C. Black). Having said this, if there is any information you want on any other specific prizes which you find difficult to obtain please do not hesitate to get in touch with me.

Yours sincerely,

Marilyn Edwards

P.S. The fact that you are not a member of the Publishers Association in no way debars you from competing!
