

After the shipwreck

we swim out further from the current, and I do look back—see the ship
slip to a whale's

moan, the split hull
hung like a broken arm
folded into shadow under my feet, holding

ash, and blood washes
over you, behind us now around all us (somewhere) how the filled chamber of your mouth

goes
dark.